Arkhalig with undershirt and cream-colored jacket with black pants Azeri (small), black & gold blouse. The single breasted Arkhalig is fastened with button hooks over the black undershirt. The long fabric of the Arkhalig hangs down over the thighs, creating a striking figure. Gold brocade was often used as decoration on both men's and women's clothing. Historically, fabrics of the Arkhalig distinguished social position of the wearer; however, this outfit is now only worn during special occasions and festivals, typically in rural areas of Azerbaijan.

O Olmasin, Bu Olsun

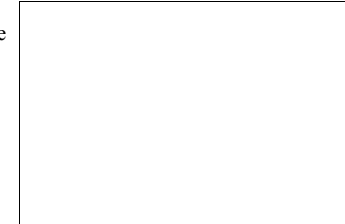

Azerbaijani comedy - Popularly known by the name of the main character, "Mashadi Ibad" was based on a musical comedy by composer Uzeyir Hajibeyov and written in the early 1900s. Two versions of the movie were produced-one in Baku, the other in Tehran. The Azerbaijan version (1956) was produced in color, based on the screenplay by Sabit Rahman and directed by Husein Seyidzade. The story pokes fun of traditionally arranged marriages and emphasizes emerging modern life styles versus old traditions.

The story is based on the age old-theme of a beautiful young woman (Gulnaz) who falls in love with a young man (Sarvar) but is obliged to marry someone else. Gulnaz' father, Rustam bey, is bankrupt. He decides that the only way to pay off his creditors is to get money by marrying off Gulnaz to the rich, old, widowed bazaar merchant, Mashadi Ibad.

But Sarvar contrives a way to foil the plan by disguising himself as the bride hidden under the thick Muslim veil. When Mashadi Ibad lifts the veil to see his bride's face, he discovers Sarvar who holds him at gun point and makes him write a statement that he really wants to marry the maid, not Gulnaz. This is where the work gets its title, "If Not This One, Then That One." The strategy works and Sarvar succeeds in marrying Gulnaz.

The traditional Azerbaijani wedding wish serves as the title to this film and appears to be just a flowery ritual formula. Yet the colorful ethnographic scenes reveal a tragedy that has lasted for ages. In this patriarchal society, girls are unwanted and 'useless'. In the past, new-born girls were often simply killed; yet, since the development of ultrasound, women have been compelled to seek abortions. Such an attitude towards women occasionally results in terrible family tragedies, one of which shook Azerbaijan a few years ago.

Caspian Ship Graveyard, Azerbaijan During Soviet times, the area around Azerbaijan's capital city of Baku was said to be among the most polluted places on earth. Although things have become considerably cleaner in the intervening sixteen years, relics of the Soviet past—like this ship graveyard just south of Baku—can still be found.
