Kamzol

red woman's vest, with gold trim and clasp. The red color indicates this Kamzol would typically be worn by a younger woman, though it is longer than what is usually worn by girls. The material and color are clearly Kazakh; however, there is evidence of Uyghur influence found in the depiction of birds and flowers in the embroidery. The Kamzol is typically worn over a long dress, or Koinok.

Video	Kazakh	Shapaghat and Azamat are brothers, divided by a common love interest. Shapaghat is a musician trying to make ends meet, while his brother is a successful businessman with a secretary that is secretly in love with him. Things take a turn for the worst when the girl they have fallen in love with is found to have connections with the mafia. Their family bonds are tested, and in the end it is the power of love that triumphs	Artist: Asanbaev, Baqbe	Picture

Kazakh poetic folk legend of the 16th century, tells about the period in the Kazakh nation when the people suffered from bloody feuds. In those times each province of the Kazakh nation had its own Khan and each tried to supersede the other. The love story of Tolegen, the brave warrior, and the beauty Zhibek ends tragically because of inter-family strife. Tolegen is foully murdered by Bekejan (the batyr, or nobleman, of the rival family), who earlier strived for the hand of Zhibek. Zhibek commits suicide after learning about the death of Tolegen.

Video	Kazakh	The Nomad (Kazakh: Көшпенділер, Köşpendiler; Russian: Кочевник, Kochevnik) is a 2006 historical epic written by Rustam Ibragimbekov, executive-produced by Miloš Forman and directed by Ivan Passer, Sergei Bodrov and Talgat Temenov. It was released on March 16, 2007 in North America, distributed by The Weinstein Company. The film has been shot in two versions: in Kazakh by Temenov for distribution in Kazakhstan and in English by Passer/Bodrov for distribution worldwide. The government of Kazakhstan has invested $40,000,000 in the movie production, making it the most expensive Kazakh film ever made. The Nomad is Kazakhstan's official entry, Best Foreign Language Film for the 79th Academy Awards.	Artist: Bodrov, Sergei	Picture

Video	Kazakh	Aidai (Nesipkul Omarbekova) is an elderly spiritual healer, a “Kazakh Baksy” who has the power to find a person's lost soul, heal the crippled and locate stolen cattle. For years, Aidai has been serving her local Kazakh community and living off the land of a rich businessman, Batyr (Farkhat Amankulov), who feels indebted to her because she helped his wife to conceive. When local gangsters decide that Batyr's land would be a prime location for a petrol station and a motel, Aidai puts up a fight, as the land is what connects her to her spiritual powers. Ignoring threats from the gangsters, Batyr goes away on vacation, but when he returns Aidai has disappeared and his land has been excavated. He is furious, so when the petrol station burns down in a freak accident, it seems like just revenge – until his son is kidnapped. Devastated and at a loss, Batyr goes looking for Aidai's help. Dark blue with black trim and red backing. Heavily embroidered with beads of yellow, white, green, orange, red, and brown. This hat recently came to our collection courtesy of a Kazakh scholar. It is beautifully made with intricate beadwork. While most Kazakh textiles are of a simpler pattern, it is possible this hat was created with Tajik influences, where such beadwork is common.

Description:
The film "Angel in a Tubeteika" is a comedy produced by the famous Kazakh director Shaken Aimanov in 1968. The main character, Tailak, is a 28 year-old graduate student at the Geography department of the University and...still not married. His mother Tana, very tired of waiting for grandchildren from her youngest son, decides to find a bride for Tailak herself. She meets pretty girls in the street and just like that starts asking them if they want to get married. Aimanov also involved in his film many famous Kazakh singers, such as Bibigul Tulegenova and Ermek Srkebayev; and the beautiful city of Almaty becomes the main protagonist of the film.

Video	Kazakh	“Shabandoz kyz” is a comedy made in the 1950s in the “Kazakhfilm” studio. The film is about love and social competition (соцсоревнование) between 2 kolkhozes. The protagonists Aidar and Galia are children of 2 kolkhoz directors. They love each other and their parents are happy to be relatives. But Aidar’s attempt to convince his father to buy a new breed of horse for their farm by using their inferior horses to compete in a national game almost costs him his love for Galia, who is also a daring horsewoman. The main idea of the film was to demonstrate the soviet system and some of its negative sides, such as bureaucracy, but it also represents many aspects of Kazakh traditions, including unique national dress, musical instruments, games, landscape, etc.	Artist:		Picture

Video	Kazakh	A lone, mischievous village boy (Jasulan Asauov) unproductively roams around the vast, desolate steppes of Kazakhstan scrawling infinite parallel lines around the exterior walls of a disused way station before walking up to the side of the railroad tracks at the sight of an approaching train, picking up a nearby rock, and inexplicably hurling the projectile onto an arbitrary compartment, consequently breaking the window of an unsuspecting passenger who instinctively turns away from the dislodged shards resulting from the impact. A cut to the film title reveals the identity of the random target as Kairat (Kairat Mahmetov), a young man from a rural province traveling to the city of Almaty to complete his university studies.
