POUND MSS. II

The Pound mss. II, 1900-1973, consist primarily of letters sent to poet Ezra Loomis Pound, 1885-1972, and to his wife, Dorothy Shakespear Pound, 1886-1973. The majority of the correspondence, including drafts of Ezra or Dorothy Pound's responses, is dated between 1946 and 1958, or the years of Ezra's confinement in a federal mental institution, St. Elizabeths Hospital in Washington, D.C.

The earlier correspondence is miscellaneous and fragmentary, both in the writers represented and in the continuity of the letters. Of the pre-1946 material only the correspondence of Basil Bunting would appear to be a complete, or nearly complete, file. There are a few early letters from T.S. Eliot, Viola (Baxter) Jordan, James Laughlin, and one from William Carlos Williams, but the greater number of all of their letters date during the St. Elizabeths period. Most of the early items are addressed to Dorothy Pound and include medical bills and receipts, some banking and passport application records, and letters from the head mistress of the school in England that Pound's son Omar attended as a child. There are a few letters written to Dorothy prior to her marriage and some that were sent to her mother, Olivia Shakespear. Most notable in both these instances are letters from William Butler Yeats.

The St. Elizabeths correspondence is characterized by its diversity in writer and content, and by its bulk. Correspondents present in the files range from aspiring young poets seeking Pound's advice and counsel (e.g., Paul Blackburn, Robert Creeley, W.S. Merwin) to prominent authors with international reputations (Richard Aldington, Wyndham Lewis, Marianne Moore); from accomplished musicians, linguists and scholars, to young students, clerics, artists, and fanatics about one cause or another. It has been remarked that "the world came to Pound" in these years as total strangers, new acquaintances, and long-term colleagues and friends corresponded, and more often than not, visited him. They kept him in touch with, and informed about, the outside world even more than did his voluminous reading. The files are replete with requests for permission to visit him and with offers to bring or send along anything he might wish to have, particularly in the way of reading matter.

Not content with writing to Pound every few days, several of his correspondents enclosed letters written to them by other people. Many of these "third party" correspondents were unknown to Pound, but they frequently came into direct contact with him within a very short time of his reading their notes or comments. Felix Giovanelli, David Horton, Dallam Simpson, and George T. Slavin were particularly fond of forwarding the letters of others.

The primary arrangement of the collection is alphabetical by name of correspondent. Following this group are the chronologically arranged items dating from 1907-1973. In addition to materials received by Dorothy or Ezra there are numerous notes, usually in Ezra's hand, directing responses to letters or just reacting to some statement in them. Occasionally these are marginal notations on the original letter; more often they are all but incoherent scribbles on envelopes or any scrap of paper immediately available. These notes may be found with the correspondence of the intended recipient in Ezra Pound's file in the alphabetical arrangement and in the "correspondence notes" near the end of the collection. Several folders of miscellaneous materials, including pieces of art work, music, photographs and some printed items, complete this main body of the collection.

The final section of the collection consists of a group of letters, 1919-1940, from Ezra Pound (a few are from Dorothy Pound) to musician Agnes Bedford, -1969. Bedford, a long-time friend of the Pounds, collaborated with Ezra on musical compositions. Many of the letters reflect their mutual interests and their work together during the 1920's and 30's. This file does not relate to those letters from Bedford to the Pounds that are in the main portion of the collection.
