A public roundtable is featured on Thursday afternoon with a follow-up working session on Friday for faculty and graduate students. The roundtable focuses on a question that is circulated in advance to the roundtable panelists. Each panelist prepares a 1000-word statement in response to a brief “provocation”: a statement and series of questions. This question and brief initial responses by each panelist are posted in advance, so that all who attend the roundtable are familiar with the core questions and the positions of panelists.

Co-sponsors: Indiana University Russian and East European Institute, Inner Asian and Uralic National Resource Center, Center for the Study of Global Change, European Union Center of Excellence and East Asian Studies Center.
